KATZIE
FIRST NATION
...land of the moss

Katzie First Nation is seeking an experienced and values-driven Wellness Program Manager to lead the planning, coordination, and delivery of wellness programming for community members. This pivotal role provides leadership and direction for culturally grounded health and wellness initiatives, ensuring programs reflect community priorities, strengthen connections, and support long-term wellbeing. Working collaboratively with community, leadership, partners, and staff, the Wellness Program Manager champions a holistic approach to wellness rooted in culture, respect, and relationship.

What You'll Do:

- Design and implement wellness programs that address the holistic health needs of community members, including physical activity, land-based programming, mental health, emotional supports, healthy living, and traditional healing practices.
- Provide leadership, oversight, and accountability for the Wellness Program, ensuring alignment with community priorities and organizational goals.
- Oversee the day-to-day coordination of wellness programming, including setting schedules, priorities, and delivery timelines.
- Supervise, support, and provide ongoing guidance and coaching to the Wellness Program Support Worker and any contractors involved in program delivery.
- Provide direction and make decisions to address operational issues arising from program delivery.
- Establish program priorities, goals, and annual workplans in collaboration with leadership and community partners.
- Foster and maintain strong relationships with community leadership, partners, and stakeholders to ensure coordinated and culturally appropriate wellness services.
- Ensure appropriate referral pathways are in place and support staff in connecting community members to relevant internal and external resources, including health, social, and wellness supports.
- Plan and oversee activities for the Katzie Men's and Women's Groups, ensuring alignment with the broader wellness vision and community priorities.
- Review program tracking data and participation summaries, and oversee program monitoring, evaluation, and required reporting to funders and leadership.
- Manage program budgets, resources, and materials to ensure responsible use of funds and long-term sustainability.
- Apply for grants and secure additional funding to support and expand wellness programming.
- Advocate for wellness initiatives, policies, and resources at organizational, community, and external levels.

What We're Looking For:

- Post-secondary education in Health Services Administration, Indigenous Community Development, Program Management or a related field, plus demonstrated experience in health or wellness program management, preferably within First Nations communities or organizations.
- An equivalent combination of education, leadership experience, and relevant lived experience will be considered.

Katzie First Nation is seeking a caring and community-oriented Wellness Program Support Worker to support the delivery of wellness programs and activities that promote holistic wellbeing. Working under the direction of the Wellness Program Manager, this role provides frontline support to community members, assists with programming and outreach, and helps create welcoming, safe, and culturally grounded spaces for participation. This is a meaningful opportunity for someone passionate about community wellness, relationship-building, and culturally safe support.

What You'll Do:

- Provide front-line support in the delivery of wellness programs and activities that promote the physical, mental, emotional, and cultural well-being of community members.
- Support the facilitation of wellness sessions, workshops, and groups, including individual and small-group supports.
- Assist with outreach activities, including food bank support and supportive transportation, to help community members access wellness programming and related health services.
- Support group planning and preparation, including scheduling support, setup, materials preparation, and follow-up.
- Prepare and maintain program spaces, ensuring rooms, equipment, and supplies are ready for scheduled activities.
- Order, organize, and maintain program supplies and materials as directed, and communicate supply needs to the Wellness Program Manager.
- Provide basic administrative support related to program delivery, including attendance tracking, simple record-keeping, and calendar or activity logs.
- Support community members with navigation of internal and external resources, following established guidelines and referral protocols.
- Build respectful and trusting relationships with community members to encourage engagement and participation in wellness activities.
- Work collaboratively with the Wellness Program Manager and Health Department team members to support consistent, culturally grounded service delivery.
- Share observations and informal participant feedback with the Wellness Program Manager to support ongoing program improvement.

What We're Looking For:

- Lived experience, volunteer involvement, or practical exposure to community-based, health, or wellness environments.
- Completion of coursework in Social Work, Health, Human Services, or a related field is considered an asset.
- Understanding of First Nations cultures, values, and community wellness perspectives, with a demonstrated commitment to learning and cultural humility.
- Ability to build respectful and supportive relationships with community members in a culturally safe manner.
- Strong interpersonal skills, including listening, communicating clearly, and working effectively as part of a team.
- Ability to follow direction, program plans, and established procedures while supporting participants' needs.
